Practically all are grown on our own farms in Long Island where soil and climate offer ideal conditions for growing and harvesting. All are carefully graded in sizes as offered and we take considerable pains in keeping our stocks healthy and true to name. We invite inspection at our nurseries or will be glad to send sample flowers of the newer and rarer varieties during the flowering period. We have produced a fine crop of high crown bulbs this season.

SELECTED FOREIGN NOVELTY GLADIOLUS

With the many hundreds of new varieties being introduced and offered to the trade each season, it is becoming more difficult for Gladiolus lovers to make selections of meritorious novelties without engaging in extensive trials and outlaying much money. With the idea of eliminating this costly experimenting for our customers, and appreciating the fact that most of the commercial kinds on the market today are of Dutch origin, we have first selected only such kinds as have been highly regarded in Europe, and, after watching their performance at our farm on Long Island, are now offering the following short list with the feeling that each kind will ultimately be a leader in its class. We have paid particular attention to Red varieties, for it is in this color that much improvement is desired.

The old type of Primulinus. The newer varieties are larger, not nearly so hooded, but still retain the gracefulness.

Read this from a prominent New England Gladiolus Grower

Rowley, Mass., May 5, 1923.

The bulbs were the best quality that I have received from anyone and you must have excellent growing and storage facilities.

Rynveld's Peonies

FOR many years we have devoted much time and considerable acreage to the cultivation of Peonies, and our extensive trials being carefully recorded, we are enabled to recommend the following list of exceptionally fine varieties, selected for their large size, perfume, long stems, upright habit and succession of bloom.

Florists are yearly devoting more room to this valuable outdoor flower, which requires very little care, and a liberal planting in a few years becomes a valuable "cut and come again" source of supply, bringing unusually big returns, particularly around Memorial Day. Considering the quality of our stock and the high standard of the varieties our prices will be found extremely low, so low in fact, that many of them cost no more than the old fashioned obsolete varieties usually offered to the trade.

Shipments—All varieties are offered in 3 to 5 eye divisions for September delivery.

Testimonial from Commercial Grower of Gladiolus in Maryland
August 9th, 1923.

"I am well pleased with Gladiolus Maidens Blush, in fact, it is the most floriferous variety I have ever grown. We are generally pretty well satisfied if we get one bloom for every blub we buy, but Maiden's Blush I bought of you (500 one inch bulbs) has already made over 1,000 spikes, and still going.
